

Exterior Architectural Artwork

Turn your building from “Dull” to “Wow”!!

The Anaheim Public Library is located at the intersection of two highly trafficked streets and is a beautiful example of 1960’s bomb shelter architecture. The large 12 feet high by 18 feet wide white panels around the top of the building were very nice in 1960, but they are very dated today.

BEFORE

Our proposed design for this library will cover these 28 plain white panels with exciting artwork that will turn the building from “Dull” to “Wow” as we create a tableau that will make the entire building a literary billboard to attract patrons.

The artwork is colorful, attractive and appealing to all ages- especially young readers.

We always think of how to make the inside of the library more appealing to patrons, and this is a way to make your library exterior a magnet for the community.

AFTER

Call us today to discuss how we at Library Design Group can transform your building into a patron grabbing architectural statement.
